Dr. Robert E. Kelly is a professor of political science and diplomacy at Pusan National University in South Korea. He earned his Ph.D. in political science from Ohio State University in 2005, with a focus on international relations and political theory. His research and teaching interests include international relations theory in East Asia, U.S. foreign policy in Asia, Korean foreign policy, and international financial institutions such as the World Bank and IMF. Dr. Kelly has published extensively on these topics, contributing to journals like Foreign Affairs, Foreign Policy, and the Korean Journal of Defense Analysis. He is also known for his analysis of inter-Korean affairs and has been featured in various media outlets. In 2017, he gained international attention when his live BBC interview was humorously interrupted by his children, a moment that went viral and earned him the nickname "BBC Dad."
